Takeaways from the Food Safety Summit

For those of you who are food producers or irradiate food products, you'll find this article of interest. Nordion was one of the proud sponsors of the 13th Annual North American Summit on Food Safety—or FSS—in Toronto, April 26-27. At FSS, we engaged with food professionals from across the food industry who are interested in safety and quality of food, and discussed what is foremost on their minds. Our takeaway is that the industry is hungry for knowledge. At Nordion, we have the experts who can answer your questions and we are always available to talk with you. Check out our Ask the Expert page and ask a question. In the meantime, we invite you to check out resources available on our website.

ICARST explores new applications for radiation technologies

We participated in the inaugural IAEA Radiation Science & Technology (ICARST) conference that was held in Vienna, Austria, in April. Although this was the first-ever ICARST event, it was well attended, well represented internationally, and balanced in terms of modalities—gamma, e-beam and x-ray. With the bringing together of industry and academia, there was plenty of discussion about intriguing new applications for radiation technologies. The organizers plan to host ICARST every four years so we recommend you keep the event on your radar.

A Billion Curies and Counting

Over the past 12 months, one of our experts, Richard Wiens, Director of Strategic Supply, has given presentations in North America and abroad about how we have diversified and enhanced our supply chain and expanded our regulatory, logistics, design and engineering capabilities to better serve you. In addition to this technical expertise, we also have a dedicated team focused on sustaining and expanding existing supplier relationships and developing new sources of supply. In case you have not had the opportunity to hear Richard's presentation, we invite you to download this one-page synopsis.
